Scheme Is Big.

The President's scheme is big, almost here and attend the inaugural ball. This beyond the possibility of contemplation. He has conceived how the people of Mars, when they saw their world cooling and its water vanishing and atmosphere growing thinner, getting together to apply scientific methods of conserving all they had and making be systematically put back into the soil an equivalent for all taken from it.

Free Interchange.

Beyond all this, there is the idea of making it as easy as possible for one like this:

"I knew he'd do some big, striking, spectacular thing of that sort which would set the whole world talking about him before he left; but who'd have thought of this!"

And more than all this, more immediately of interest, the President sees the possibility of promoting peace and prosperity by bringing the nations more and more to know and understand each other; by getting them to co-operate in many works; by bringing them around the council board at The Hague as often as possible to confer together and impress on each other the fact that the world as the first private citizen of his country, a maker of peace and a promoter of reforms. So much and vastly more has been in the President's mind. What will come of his plan is matter for speculation. He will himself be in Africa when his conference meets at The Hague next September. That the nations will respond, and do so with enthusiasm and alacrity, is not doubted here. It is fully expected that the press and public and parliaments of the public and parliaments of whole world will promptly respond in favor of the plan. For one thing, there s nothing to be said against it.

After African Hunt.

But when he is done with his African hunt the President will come back to civilization, and has arranged to visit several European countries. He has invitations from rulers to visit a good share of the world, and there is every reason to expect that when he appears in Europe he will receive such an ovaon as a private citizen has never nown. From that to the chieftaincy the great movement he will have started will be but a short and obvious

NAVAL MILITIA PLANS FOR GENERAL BOARD

Organization Similar to That in Regular Army Is Sought. Assistant Secretary of Navy Satterlee's Suggestion to Appoint Committee Is Adopted.

"I refer to a gasolene-propelled torpedo boat," said Mr. Satterlee, on this point. "It has seemed to me that the development of such a type would be of benefit to the navy, and offer opportunity for a certain class of practice which is not now available to the naval militia.

"The navy does not need these boats now," Mr. Satterlee explained, and added, significantly, "it would be well to have them in commission.

Value to Navy.

"There has been no question since the war with Spain of the value of naval militia to the navy. If the naval militia keeps on with the same spirit of progress, the same keenness and enthusiasm as in the past, you can make that relation closer and closer every year. You are winning the friendship and regard and the professional respect of the regular naval officers with whom you serve.
